ABSTRACT

A method for controlling disposition of a candidate object in an object-oriented programming environment includes determining a first value indicative of a number of references to the candidate object that are not references from other objects; and controlling disposition of the object on the basis of the first value.